SHEEP!

By Gus Freeman
Uniforce Livestock Editor

This is part one of a five part series profiling the personalities that make Brigham Young University a special and unique campus.

Most BYU students hardly ever visit the Animal Science Farm located northwest of campus. Some say the smell keeps them away. Others simply find it hard to find courtesy phones that far from the Wilkinson Center. These students are missing out on one of BYU's most colorful personalities—sheep!

According to LaRay Wyoming, administrative assistant of the Marlon Perkins School of Animal Science, sheep are lots of fun. "Sheep are lots of fun," she said in an interview last Friday.

"Sheep do silly things," she continued, "like making noises and eating food."

Some students do not see sheep as particularly interesting animals. Jason Lund, 28, a senior from Santa Barbara, California, majoring in graphic design, has never seen sheep in person before and does not plan on it. When asked if he would visit the Animal Science Farm to see BYU's sheep, Lund said, "No, they are boring."

Wyoming takes issue with Lund's point of view which, she adds, is common among graphic design majors. "The stereotypic image of sheep is that they are timid and Sheep like Bill (pictured here) are an important part of the BYU atmosphere easily led," she said. "But not our sheep. They have a mind of their own and are quite aggressive."

"The other day, all the sheep went over to the Smith Field House to watch the women's volleyball team play. They did not ask permission and got in quite a bit of trouble, especially after picking fights with the opposing team's bench."

Each sheep has its own personality, according to Wyoming. "Most of the sheep have been given cute names based on their particular traits. We have one sheep, his name is Bill."

In an effort to share the joy of sheep with more students, the Animal Science Farm has scheduled a luncheon in honor of sheep. The luncheon will take place Monday at the feeding trough on the northeast corner of the Animal Science Farm. The keynote speaker will be Henry, the oldest sheep on the farm and co-chair of the Western States Board of Sheep. He will be making silly noises and answering questions. The theme of the luncheon will be "Kindness Begins With Sheep." Admission is free.

Next week: "Bees!"

Interesting facts about sheep that you probably didn't know

- Sheep is plural for sheep
- A group of sheep is called a herd
- Male sheep don't grow beards like their cousin the goat
- Sheep grow thicker coats in winter
- Sheep don't wear pants like humans do
- Sheep look funny after they are sheared
- Sheep like to dance and play
- Sheep make funny noises that sound kind of like baa, baa
- Sheep are slaughtered so you can eat them
- Sheep will attack and kill humans if prodded and provoked too much

Administrators rejoice, dance, sing, prance, laugh, giggle, and point their fingers mockingly

By JOHN TROTSKY
Uniforce Editor-in-chief

Administration officials have let their hair down for a moment to join in campus-wide celebrations. The celebrations sprung up after a press release was leaked last week announcing one of the crowning achievements of the current administration.

"Student Review is dead" proclaimed Martha Blenzig, the Assistant Chief Vice Co-Administrator in charge of administering.

Student Review, the nine-year-old underground newspaper at BYU, floundered and fell last semester and early last week administrators announced their triumph.

"Now that they are gone I feel free to say that I never really liked them," said BYU Provost Barry Fife. "Although, between you and me, I must admit that I never missed an issue."

The head of the Honor Code Council compared the demise of Student Review to the collapse of the Soviet Union. Pointing out that the U.S. Government spent trillions of dollars over nearly forty-five years in countering the Soviets all over the world, Zach Morris compared those efforts to the efforts of the BYU in countering the advances of Student Review. "We spent, well I'm not allowed to say, but let's just say a lot, a lot of tuition dollars to undermine that lousy, stinking, no good, worthless paper run by commies, pinkos, and their sympathizers. It was the largest item in our budget."

Volcano erupts; Judy was right

By HARVEY HANSEL
Uniforce Staff Writer

Cody Judy's prediction that a volcano would erupt in Utah finally came true yesterday at 4:34 p.m.

Kevin Jefferies, 17, a junior majoring in golf was doing some homework when he heard a noise in the backyard. When he went to investigate he saw a two foot mound over by the garage spouting out smoke and debris.

"It didn't do much damage, just scorched some grass and weeds," said Jefferies.

Judy's supporters have proclaimed Jefferies' backyard holy ground and set up camp there.

Congress passes mortality bill

WASHINGTON — Despite lengthy filibusters by radical conservative opposition, the controversial "mortality bill" narrowly passed in one of the closest votes in history. The stirring bill that was written by the late Larry Grodon, D-North Dakota, states that "all present and future members of the Congress of the United States of America must explicitly and unequivocally accept and acknowledge the fact that they will someday die and cease to exist." Opposition leader Thor Vandal, R-New Mexico, shortly after the result of the vote was posted was heard shouting "I will never accept! I am invincible! I will reign with terror and might forever!" Other stipulations of the bill force all members of congress to grow old, make mistakes, and perform basic bodily functions regularly.

Study reveals startling results

BERKELEY — Researchers in the school of political science at the University of California at Berkeley have uncovered new facts to support an astounding new discovery. George Furt, head of the research facilities said that "new irrefutable evidence that has recently come to our attention clearly shows that everyone is wrong." This amazing breakthrough will clearly have serious worldwide repercussions. Furt later suggested that "everyone change their views immediately because everything anyone has thought up to this point is wrong. We are absolutely positive about our findings." Researchers immediately began further studies to find out what was right but no findings have been released to this point.

2,784 people accused

PROVO — Chris Holton appeared in the Brigham Young University Standards Office early yesterday morning and began to accuse people. His accusation session ran until late last night and he has said he hopes to continue today. Standards officials took the names of each of those accused and began expulsions soon after Holton arrived yesterday morning. "This is a major breakthrough for us" exclaimed Robert Davis, head of BYU Standards Office.

People are happy

By RALPH HALTER

Uniforce Staff Writer

If you've been down in the dumps lately, you're a minority. Recent statements from faculty members and students, as well as a report from BYUSA (see graph), confirm that students are more gleeful than ever.

"I'm so happy!" said Terrance Walters, 22, a freshman from Texarkana, Texas, majoring in advanced dental theory.

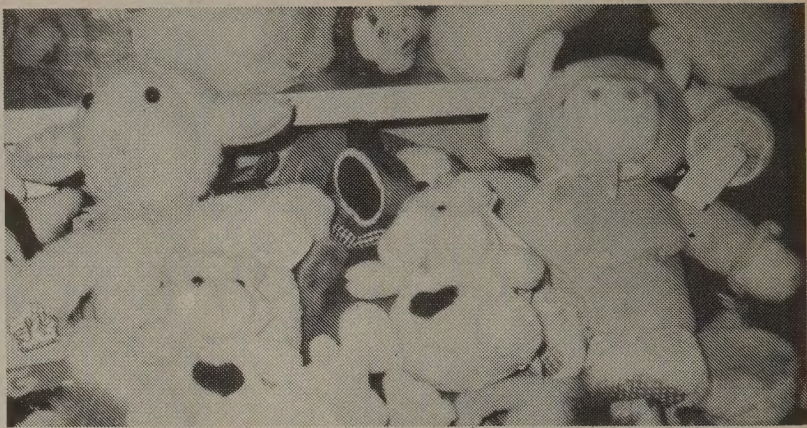

"What are you so happy about?" asked Lolly Adverb, 79, a senior from Burgersberg, PA, majoring in Bolivian poultry mechanics.

"I don't know, I'm just really happy all the time," answered Terrance Walters, 22, a freshman from Texarkana, Texas, majoring in advanced dental theory.

"That's strange, I've been feeling the same way but have not told anyone because people might make fun of me," countered Lolly Adverb, 79, a senior from Burgersberg, PA, majoring in Bolivian poultry mechanics.

"No, it's ok, we're all so happy. We would never make fun of you. So, what are you doing this weekend? I'm thinking of catching Forrest Gump tomorrow. Wanna come?" queried Terrance Walters, 22, a freshman from Texarkana, Texas, majoring in advanced dental theory.

"I'm sorry, I have to wash my hair that night," rebuffed Lolly

Happy people all over campus are buying more stuffed animals like these Adverb, 79, a senior from Burgersberg, PA, majoring in Bolivian poultry mechanics.

James Peterson, 700, a Psychology professor from Cypress, CA, gave several possible explanations for the increase in happiness, but refused to disclose which one he thought was most correct.

Peterson said the added smiles could be attributed to anything from increased scripture study to novicane to the sparse amount of Student Reviews available last semester.

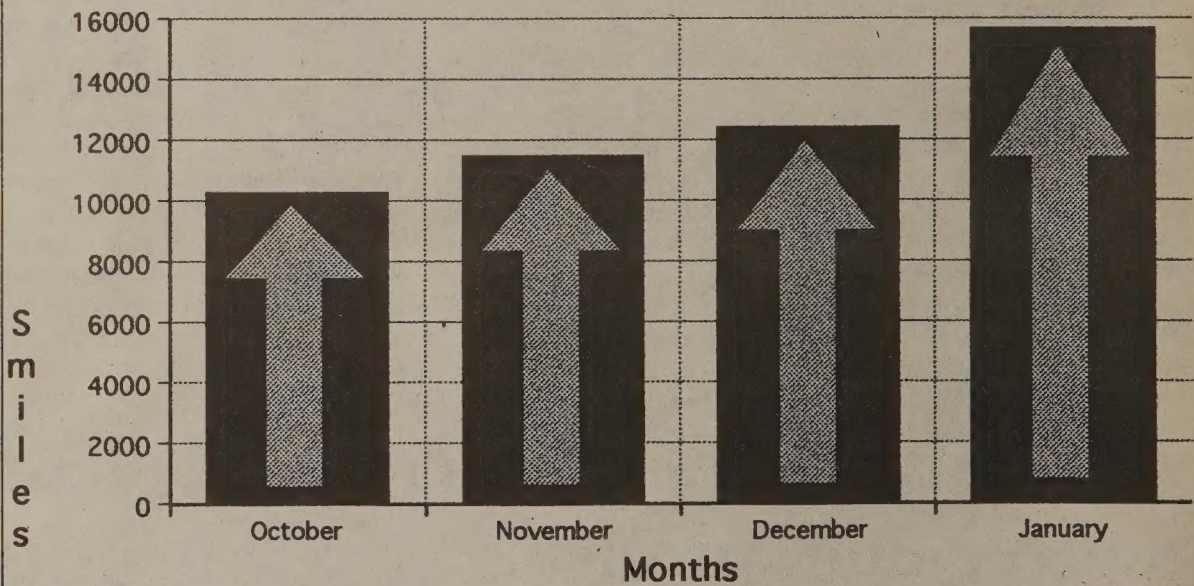

"It's quite probable that we're just following one of the standard cycles described in the Book of Mormon," said Peterson. "Righteousness leads to prosperity and to increased happiness. Who knows what act or acts have heightened the righteousness on campus, although I wouldn't be surprised if the higher levels of spirituality were simply due to the fact that as a campus, we no longer stand during the closing hymn."

Other explanations, taken from a statement by former ASBYU President Rex Lee, give credit for the happiness to the kissing booth at the last 'Friday Night Live', and the more pleasant spirit apparent on campus since the questionable art has been removed from the HFAC. "Whatever it is," said Lee, "it has really increased the stuffed toy sales in the bookstore, and we hope to harness it in time for next fall's freshman orientation, so the new students will be able to enjoy some of this happiness too."

Cool, huh?

HAPPINESS LEVELS AT BYU

Police reports on the rise

By KENNY BERTHOLD

Uniforce Staff Writer

Campus police today denied charges that something was going on.

"No, there's nothing going on," said police spokesman Larry Cover-up.

Despite the repeated denials, accusations continue to be leveled by several parties. "I think there's something going on, and I intend to get to the bottom of it," said Mary Wannaknow, president of Students for a Better Whatever. Wannaknow has started a petition demanding that the police admit everything. At the time this was printed she had obtained over 3,000 signatures of other people who want to know what's going on as well.

When asked exactly what was going on, Wannaknow said she couldn't talk about it. "It's lots of stuff, all over the place; you can just pretty much tell that something's going on. I'm surprised you haven't noticed, it's gotten pretty bad lately," said Wannaknow.

"I'd like to repeat that there is absolutely nothing going on, really," said spokesman Coverup in a press conference several minutes after the previous one.

The student body is divided on this subject. "I think there's something going on," said Treavor Meatsandwich, 22, a junior from Truckee, CA, majoring in advanced condiment theory.

"I don't think anything's going on," said Allison Iknowthisworldiskillingyou, 11, a sophomore from Osaka, Japan, majoring in regional dental studies.

The Daily Uniforce uncovered records that show that there were over 23 reported incidents of "goings on" in the last four months. While only 7 of these reports were "serious goings on," at least 19 of them had several "goings on" going at once and another 12 were "going on and on." The Daily Uniforce tracked down and asked President Rex Lee about the findings.

"While I don't doubt your sources, there's really nothing going on," said Lee. President Lee proceeded to give the Daily Uniforce a cookie and said, "Run along now."

New devotional policy

By GERARD D'ANGEL

Uniforce Staff Writer

The Department of Student Life has announced its new policy for devotional and forum attendance for Winter Semester 1995. As of next month, anyone found not in attendance at devotionals or forums will be shot dead.

"We think this will really give us the boost in attendance we want," said Student Life spokeswoman Ginger Glassman. "A lot of people didn't approve of the policy of closing the Cougar eat and library during devotionals, so we've implemented this policy instead."

Glassman said that students are free to use all university services during devotionals, but there's always the chance they may be killed.

"Employees have been instructed not to shoot everyone who comes in, just a few. It will take a while for everyone to learn about the policy and I'd hate for there to be unnecessary loss of life," said Glassman.

While things may be a little scary at first, Glassman said that she expects few problems. "I imagine that most students will fall in line after the first few students are shot. It shouldn't be too bad."

The change was made, said Glassman, to turn the devotional attendance policy into a more "principle based" system.

"We're telling the students, 'Hey, the Cougar eat is open, you have your free agency to go there if you want, but you also have the freedom to suffer the consequences,'" said Glassman.

When asked if the new policy was legal, Glassman said, "Yeah, whatever."

On-campus for everyone

By JUDY JANE

Uniforce Staff Writer

In response to continuing ACLU pressure, BYU Spokesman Molly McThompson announced today that students will no longer be allowed to live off-campus.

"Those darned rights people have been giving us too much trouble!" she said in a press conference Thursday. "We have plans to change all that."

After the incident, associate director of Student Housing

Affairs, LaLarry Ferguson announced that BYU would no longer give its approval to any house or apartment complex in Utah Valley. "We hope that by forcing students not to live in places such as King Horny or Deliberately Square, we can drive these landlords out of business. When they declare bankruptcy and must sell their property, we will buy it and add it to the BYU campus," said Ferguson.

BYU construction crews will then build blocks upon blocks of friendly, affordable on-campus housing facilities in the style of Deseret Towers and Helaman Halls. "Not only will our students have a wonderful place to live," grinned McThompson sheepishly, "but we'll be in a better position to scrutinize the occasionally questionable lifestyles of our entire student body."

Cosmo was unavailable for comment.

Even honor code violators deserve second chance

His crime was a terrible one, but convicted pinko Ahmad Rashid "Pete" Tabul has fulfilled his debt to BYU and the United States. Tabul obligingly performed his restitution of 30 hours university service passing out College Republican applications. Yet restitution aside, his crime is at the center of an administration debate over student obligations to the blessed land under which the university exists.

BYU Provosts and the religion department argue that because the United States is holy ground, the National Anthem is a hymn; furthermore, facing the ASB at 5:15 while the anthem is played is a religious duty.

Tabul was caught walking during the anthem on Tuesday, January 17th near the MARB. Although he claimed to be on his way home, further cross examination by University police discovered that "Pete" Tabul is actually a closet communist with blatant disregard for the free-market values as espoused in the scriptures. Evidence supporting the case against Tabul included: 1) a foreign visa, 2) an accent, and 3) no knowledge of the Boy Scout oath.

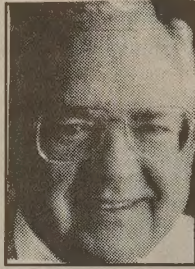

Now, a debate rages inside the administration about what to do with "Pete" Tabul.

Many faculty and BYUSA administrators are calling for his expulsion from the United States on grounds of heresy. Yet others, most notably faculty associated with the Evergreen Institute, think Tabul can be "re-educated" and taught proper values and attitudes toward God and country.

It is the opinion of this paper that Tabul should be given a second chance. Many is the time we the editors hummed our way through the National Anthem at BYU basketball games. We would welcome the chance to be given an intensive course in civics and proper American values. God bless this country, even with her misguided citizens like Tabul.

What a pain in the butt

by Earnest Geigercounter

My seat is really, really hard. I have to sit on it all day long, and after a while my backside gets really, really tired and sore. My seat is not very soft. There are no cushions on it, there is nothing soft about it, the seat does not give when pressure is applied to it. My seat is made of a hard substance that I am not able to identify. It has a hard back, too. The back is not very soft, either. Both the chair and its back are really, really hard. Neither of them are very soft.

Sometimes I try to fluff my seat but I cannot, for it is very hard. I try to imagine something as hard as my seat and I cannot. The hardness of my seat fills my mind and envelops my emotions.

As I sit here and ponder the hardness of my seat, I wonder whether or not there are other students out there, thinking about how hard their seats are. Students like me looking deep into themselves and finding beneath them something hard.

I especially notice the hardness of my seat when I happen to be sitting in the library. The seats there are really, really hard too. They are not very soft either. The hardness increases as you sit longer. I think we should stage a huge "stand-in" in the library and refuse to sit down until they bring us cushioned seats, like the ones I used to have back home when I was in high school. Now those were seats. They were not hard, they were soft. Maybe we could also demand that they give us cushioned backs for our seats. Then we would really be living right.

Although, come to think of it, it would be hard to stand up for that long of a time, and holding all those books would really be a strain on your arms. Your arms were surely become fatigued. The more I think about it, in fact, the more I realize that maybe having a hard seat is really a blessing. I mean, really, if our derrieres are aching maybe that is telling us that we need to stand up and stretch for a while. Stretching is good for your circulation. Stretching can liberate the mind and free your body. I don't like studying anyway and any excuse to stop studying and stand up to stretch would be a tremendous blessing.

So the next time you are sitting on your hard chair and thinking about how hard your seat is, and how soft it isn't, remember that it isn't the hardness of the seat that matters, but what goes on while you are sitting on it.

Weirdo feet

To the Editor:

More and more lately, I keep, like, seeing all these weird people on campus. The other day I saw a guy who had bologna sandwiches for feet. I saw another guy that wore nothing but guavas. If these guys want to wear weird clothes and have sandwiches for feet and not look like everyone else here, they should, like, get out of here and go to some weird clothes, sandwich feet University or something. Weird people suck.

Even in my classes this is a problem. Especially with chicks. Lots of them have, like, big head wounds and shout unintelligible phrases. Probably they all belong to some head wound club. Head wounds suck! Chicks should, like learn to not fall on their heads and speak normal. Women professors too. They should have to wear bandages on their wounds and go home and stay in bed instead of grossing us all out. Anyway, I just want to say that, like, people with sandwich feet and chicks with head wounds and anyone who's not a normal footed, headwoundless person should figure out where to get help or else just get out of BYU.

Solutions

To the Editor:

I think the Varsity Theater is great.

You see, it's students who have to cut out all the cursing, violence, and sexual explicitness that goes on in these films.

In conclusion, I think it's clear that what BYU needs to do to solve this problem and give equality to all students is create more jobs, perhaps by doing additional landscaping or building a parking garage.

Stay away!

To the Editor:

As the student body obviously knows, the Memorial Lounge in the Wilkinson Center is a wonderful place in which to relax and study. The atmosphere is warm and inviting, and the furniture is comfortable. What the students may not know is that the Memorial Lounge belongs to me. It is mine and mine alone. Up until this point I have been gracious concerning the free use of my lounge, the most beautiful room on campus, by students. But the time has come to put my foot down. I will no longer allow anyone to cross the threshold of that palace of space. It is mine. Mine, mine, mine I say! And I alone will rule and reign among its warming fire and graceful chairs. I alone will dance there in the dark when all the world slumbers. I alone will not share my table with ANYONE! I alone will choose any channel I want on the four color televisions. I alone will pray to the Great Spirit Monster of the Memorial Lounge.

You can not stop me, although I know you will try. I know the nature of the Memorial Lounge, and I know what secrets it holds; it will not allow me to see defeat. It is mine, all MINE! Taunt me and you will be destroyed!

Trust me!

To the Editor:

We place so much emphasis on the Honor Code that it's a shame we trust ourselves. I am referring, of course, to the book detectors at the library. Since we all signed the Honor Code to come here, there should be no need for book detectors, just like there should be no need for bike locks. Whenever I leave the library, I am offended because I'm treated like a common, everyday, violent criminal. As a valiant follower of the Honor Code, I feel I deserve more trust and respect than this.

Maybe there are non-students who come onto our campus and steal all the books and bikes. The simple solution to this problems to make one of the doors for students and one for non-students. Students would show their IDs and walk out while non-students would have to go through a rigorous body search. Since faculty/staff cards and employee-dependent cards (dependents aren't on the Honor Code but faculty/staff are) look similar, we could start color-coding them, for example changing the stripes from just blue to orange for dependents, blue for faculty, and green for staff. Or we could just have everyone wear colored armbands while on campus. Or we could die our hair. Or we could put stars on our bellies. This way, everyone would be identified and we would know who we can and can't trust and who does or doesn't belong. This would be an easy and simple way to keep from violating anyone's Honor Code rights.

Nude art OK

To the Editor:

I'm writing in response to the letters objecting to nude art in any form being displayed on campus.

I'd just like to say that I pretty much agree. Nudity can be really gross, especially when its somebody that's full on repulsive.

I've had plenty of experience drawing from models, and most of the nude ones gross me out. One time, I had to draw from a model and he wasn't very cute. It was lousy, I was grossing-out the whole time.

If people aren't good-lookin', they shouldn't model for drawing and painting classes. That would really solve the whole problem, because then there wouldn't be any pictures or paintings of ugly nude people. We should stop spending our tuition money on building big buildings and use it to hire some really hot guys to model for the art classes. I'm sure for the right price Tom Cruise and Brad Pitt would come and do it. I'm sure a lot of girls would stop complaining so much if there were nude pictures of them all over the place. Then we could hire some leggy supermodels for all the guys to draw. People only get offended when the nude person depicted is nasty to look at.

People won't get offended by nude art if the naked person in the picture is totally hot, because the human body is a beautiful creation, and it was made in the image of God.

BYU students 'into' cows

By SALLY BONAPARTE

Uniforce Staff Writer

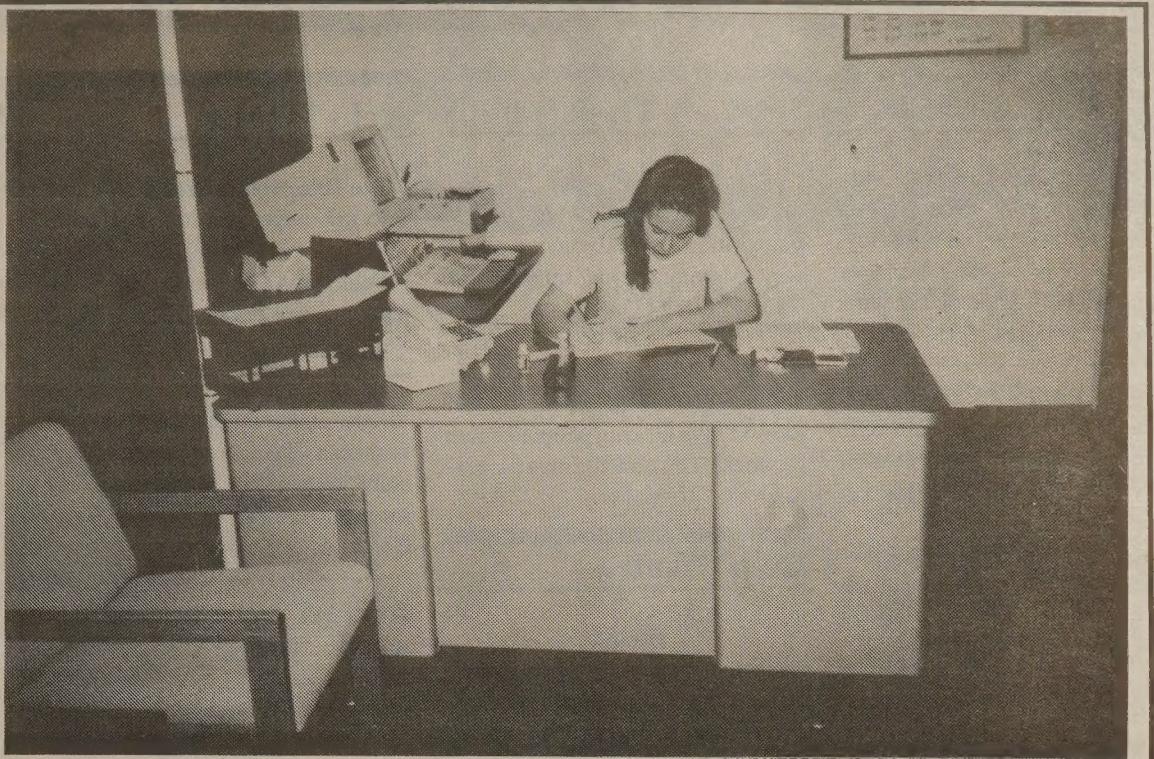

In a major interdisciplinary study conducted jointly by BYU professors LaArle Butterfield of the Agricultural Department, LaRusty Barrel of the Psychology Department, and Verle Gubler of the Zoology Department, BYU students were found to be primarily cow-lovers, or bovophiles, as opposed to University of Utah students, whose livestock preferences tended to lean toward sheep. The study set out to first discover students preferences, and then to determine if and how these tendencies were apparent in their physical and mental characteristics. "The bovophile," according to Dr. Butterfield, "can be characterized by a calmer, more stubborn nature, increased flatulence, and a sloping forehead." The oviphile, as the sheep-lover is referred to in the study, is represented by nearly 60% of University of Utah students and can be recognized by his affability, spontaneity, and wooly tail.

The study gives conclusive proof that the farm animals we all love can have both physiological and psychological manifestations. When asked how livestock preference could affect or reflect a person's physical or mental state, Butterfield asserted that "the force of livestock is very powerful. When those critters get a hold of your heart, they just don't let go until you ship 'em to the slaughterhouse."

You may well wonder 'What possible significance could this have? Will this study change my life?' Well, if you are one of the 73% of BYU students who "digs" cows, you could suffer such symptoms as lactose intolerance, spotted pigmentation, and bloat. You might also, if you are a woman, have problems getting dates, according to one segment of Butterfield's study. Male bovophiles, who comprised 65.333% of BYU's bovophiles, if they take their condition too seriously, may risk ostracism, antisocialism, and painful hoof-kicks. Some benefits to being a bovophile may include long eyelashes, an efficient digestive system, and the ability to predict rain by sitting themselves under a tree.

The 58.72% of U of U students who consider themselves oviphiles tend to "have lower IQs" than their non-oviphile peers. They are less assertive and yet less self-conscious than bovophiles. "The oviphile is truly a paradox," says Barrel. "We really didn't cover the oviphiles much," admits

RESEARCHING COWS: Iris Brown, 24, a Junior majoring in Chemical Engineering studies up on cows daily.

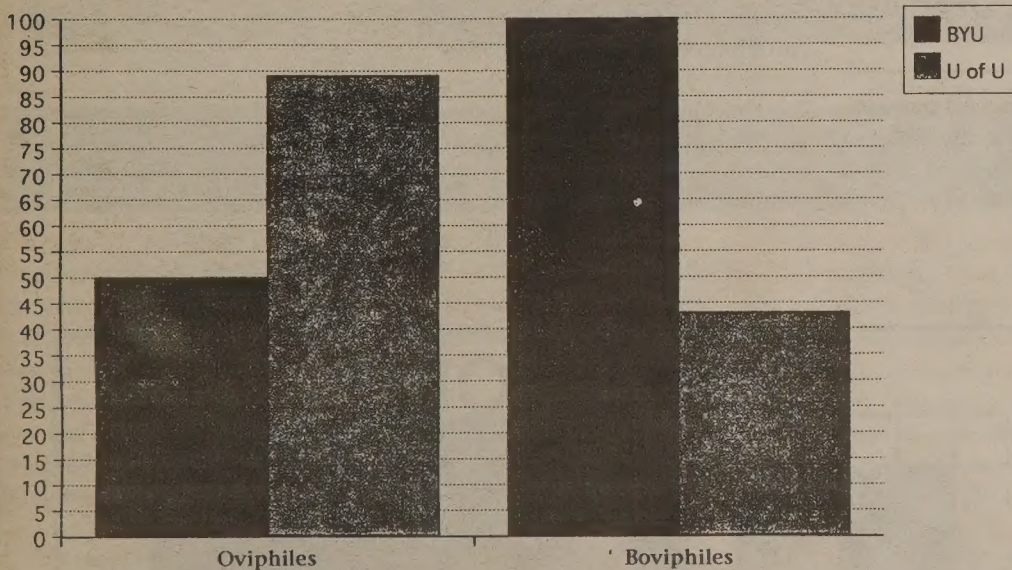

Butterfield. "Perhaps it's because everyone on our team is a bovophile; now, some may call that unscientific, but we all just felt that we should concentrate on the characteristics of the cow-lovers. It was a hard decision to make; we had to ruminate over it for a few months, but we finally decided to narrow our study to the lovers of the cow. We also wanted to prevent any potential rivalry and violence that might come from this deep schism."

"The bovophile has, traditionally, been an instrument of social and political change in this country," commented Professor. Barrel. "For instance, Perry Smith and Saul Bellow are both bovophiles." The oviphile, however, because of his incurable humility, may not have what it takes to succeed in the world. "I feel that this study makes clear the advantage our fine youth truly have over those apostates down at the U," commented Butterfield. "If we continue to instill a love of cows in our Mormon youth we will assure the future success of this great institution."

Igloo-building team wins tournament

By ROGER CANISTER
Uniforce Staff Writer

The BYU igloo building team took first place in the "Pile the Ice High" Tournament in Juno, Alaska last weekend. They were able to build 20 more igloos than any other team at the event.

"There weren't actually any other teams at the tournament," said Franklin Shriver, captain of the Frozen Cougars Igloo Building team. "We were under the impression that there were several igloo building teams at universities across the country, but the guy in the parking lot at the tournament said we were the only one in the USA. That would explain why we have won all our meets by forfeit."

Shriver continued, "This same guy said that there actually wasn't a tournament. A bunch of his friends made the whole thing up just to see if there actually was such a thing as an igloo building team. He was laughing a lot and being around him made me uncomfortable."

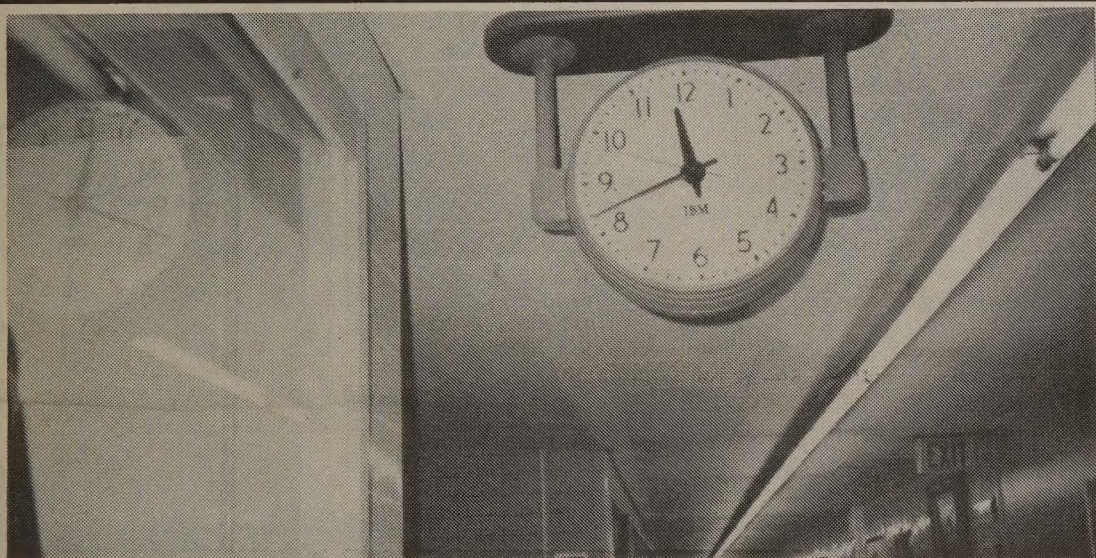

Coach Crystal Frozano said the team had a lot to be proud of. "These kids have been training hard for several months and they deserved every drop of the 6-pack of Pepsi they won."

Attendance at home meets has also caused discouragement among team members. "So far, nobody has ever showed up to one of our meets," said Stephen Frost, a team member, "Even when the other teams forfeit, we still build several igloos just to show our stuff. If you've never seen 15 guys all working together to build an igloo, you really should. It's a graceful ballet!"

After they are built, Frost said the igloos usually are left to melt, but things took a different turn at the Alaska tournament. "The guys in the parking lot started driving their trucks through the igloos. We wouldn't have minded, but we were still building them. Some team members almost got hurt," Frost said.

The Frozen Cougars' next meet is Friday, January 6, at 8:00 p.m. at the SFH field.

Police Beat

MURDER

A male student was apprehended on January 25 after killing a fellow student in the checkout line of the HBLL. University Police said the incident involved a coveted copy of a Fluid Power textbook. The student was fined $300 and referred to standards.

THEFT

Police apprehended a female student after discovering their bikes had been stolen. The student said she, "just wanted to steal a bike," and promptly returned the bicycles to the officers. Police said they would not press charges as long as the student didn't tell anyone about the incident.

VEHICULAR MAN-SLAUGHTER

A 20-year-old male student was killed when he was struck by a golf cart driven by a member of the BYU Grounds Crew. The grounds crew worker claimed he was "really excited about the new tulip bulbs that had just arrived." The employee was recently named "Employee of the Month" and is therefore exempt from any prosecution.

LEWD CONDUCT

Weird stuff is still going down in the second floor HBLL men's room. University Police declined to explain how they knew.

ANOTHER MURDER

A female employee of the Cougarreat was beaten to death with a food tray when she explained to a student that the "specialty fry" of the day was tater tots and not criss cut fries. The student was fined $300 and referred to standards.

SHOPLIFTING

University Police were called to the Bookstore after an undercover officer caught a male student stealing school supplies. After an interrogation, the student admitted to shoplifting on several other occasions. Several hours later, the student admitted to playing a major role in the Kennedy assassination plot. The student was fined $2,000 and referred to the Warren Commission.

LEWD CONDUCT

A male student was arrested outside the HFAC after repeatedly yelling "There's a party in my pants" to female passersby. The student was fined $300 and told to try "Hey baby, what's your sign?" instead.

STILL ANOTHER MURDER

That Student Who Always Plays the Bagpipes on Maeser

Hill was found dead at the bottom of the Botany Pond. His feet were encased in cement. University police apprehended a female student in connection with the murder. While police agreed with the student's assertion that the bagpipes were annoying, she was still fined $300 and referred to standards.

SHOPLIFTING

A Female student was arrested in connection with the theft of $250 worth of textbooks from the bookstore. After questioning, the student admitted to killing 14 people at a recent basketball game. The student was fined $300 and referred to standards.

TRESPASSING

Twelve students were caught having a sleep over under the stage of the Nilke Experimental Theater. The students escaped on foot after the security officer's radio failed. University Police said, "If you were the ones who did it, we will find you. And when we do, you'll pay."

YEP, MORE MURDER

A Standards officer was arrested after killing 147 students in the SWKT. "Oops!" said the officer. The officer was fined $300 and referred to standards.

Student wins national sleep contest

By TRACY FARNSWORTH

Uniforce Staff Writer

A BYU student from Arkansas took first place in the 7th Annual Craftmatic Adjustable Bed Sleep Classic.

Jeremy Pinkins, 29, a junior majoring in recreational management won last week's contest by sleeping for 34 hours on a Craftmatic adjustable bed. Jeremy was declared the winner after tests proved that no drugs were used and that he never officially entered a coma.

As the winner of the classic, Jeremy will become the spokesman for the Craftmatic corporation and will tour the world sleeping in some of the most exotic locations on earth.

Jeremy was unavailable for comment, as soon after the award ceremony he fell asleep.
